Jason "J-Mac" McElwain, from Greece, NY was diagnosed early in life as autistic. While managing his Greece Athena High School basketball team he was added to the lineup for the final home game of 2006. J-Mac scored an incredible 20 points (six three pointers) in about 4 minutes of play. The feat was honored as ESPN's Best Moment in Sports and led to a media storm and greater awareness of the developmental disorder. J-Mac met President George W. Bush and sports greats Magic Johnson, Kobe Bryant and Peyton Manning. McElwain went on to assistant coach at Greece Athena and qualified to run in the Boston Marathon. He was signed to play in the final regular season 'Sharks game of 2016, scoring 10 points (two three pointers) with two rebounds as Rochester crushed Western New York 128-78. For the 'Sharks March 5, 2006 game, McElwain served as Team Manager but was not in uniform as Rochester played Boston at the BCA.

Courtney Wagner played basketball and soccer at Canandaigua (NY) High School when she was diagnosed with stage-four brain cancer in 2011. Fighting the disease long-past the original prognosis of 18 months, she eventually graduated from Canandaigua and attended William Smith College. On March 1, 2015 the RazorSharks signed Courtney to a one-day contract making her honorary captain for their home game against the Philadelphia Flight. The 'Sharks admitted fans free to the game for showing a phone post or tweet with the hashtag #GetCourtneytoEllen. (Courtney's favorite TV personality was Ellen DeGeneres.) The 'Sharks' Gabe Freeman sent the opening tip-off to Wagner who dribbled to the basket. Freeman and the 'Sharks Anthony Stover then lifted Courtney up and she dunked the ball to give Rochester a 2-0 lead. The 'Sharks social media push led to Wagner's appearance on the Ellen Show four days later which included best wishes from soccer star Abby Wambach and the United States women's soccer team. Wagner passed away on October 26, 2015.
